

What are we doing (hashing)

What is hashing?

Every other Saturday, at precisely 1600 hours, a motley group of assorted runners and walkers assemble at a previously designated rum shop, somewhere in Grenada. After an initial briefing by their leader (known as The Hash Master) they set off in the bush, shouting ON ON. They follow a trail of flour or shredded paper which takes the "pack" through some of the most attractive parts of the island and they return to the rum shop a couple of hours later to consume large quantities of beer and undo all the good that this running and walking has done to them. Are these people mad? The "Grand Inquisitor" of the Grenada Hash House Harriers, long time resident of Grenada John Albanie, endeavours to explain.
